

Denmark

Excerpt: ...lonely, thrifty folks accomplished in the long winter days is surprising. This Hedebo needlework is the finest stitchery you can well imagine, wrought on home-spun linen with flaxen thread. Such marvellous patterns and intricate designs! Little wonder that the best examples are treasured by the nation. The men of the family wore a white linen smock for weddings and great occasions. So thickly are these overwrought with needlework that they will stand alone, and seem to have a womans lifetime spent upon them. Needless to say, these family garments were handed down as heirlooms from father to son. Knitting, weaving, the making of Jyde pottery and wooden shoes (which all wear), are among the other industries of these people. As we journey through Skjern and down the west coast to Esbjerg, the end of our journey, we notice the picturesque attire of the field-workers. An old shepherd, with vivid blue shirt and sleeveless brown coat, with white straggling locks streaming over his shoulders, tends his few sheep. This clever old man is doing three things at once
